ABSTRACT

The document provides information on the name of the program, the institution, prerequisites, length of course, and certificate or degree offered for 81 programs for the training of physician assistants as part of Operation MEDIHC (Military Experience Directed Into Health Careers). Fifty-three programs are in primary care; the remaining 28 are specialty programs in the following fields: pathology, surgery, orthopedics, obstetrics, opthalmology, podiatry, urology, emergency medicine, nuclear medicine, anesthesiology, circulatory medicine, and cardiopulmonary medicine. Programs approved by the American Medical Association on Medical Education as meeting their program requirements either for the Assistant to the Primary Care Physician or a specialty physician assistant program are designated. PHYSICIAN ASSISTANT PROGRAMS .. SUMMARY

This summary includes some of the programs offered throughout the country for the Assistant to the Primary Care Physician and specialty physician assistant. Additional offerings continue to be announced. For more detailed information, write to the individual program. It should also be noted that the term physician assistant is generic rather than specific.

Courses of Instruction vary in length. Entrance requirements differ with the program. High School graduation or the equivalent is usually the minimum. Military medical experience as well as civilian health care experience is often considered. College or university courses are sometimes required.

The Allied Health Professions and Nursing should also be explored. There are more than 200 health professions and occupations which are vitally important to the provision of comprehensive health care. Information about these is available from our office.

Before making a final decision in the career which will carry you through life, check all possibilities and examine them carefully to be sure they meet proper standards of criteria.

Note: Thanks are extended to the individual program directors, as well as professional organizations and government agencies who assisted us in the third revision of this summary.
